S. Segal : Business Feel: Leading Paradigm Shifts in Organisations before purchasing it in order to gage whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised Business Feel: Leading Paradigm Shifts in Organisations:

Turning Leadership Thinking on its HeadBy Bill HoveyThis is compelling reading for leaders and those with an interest in leadership and leadership development. The way we lead is by drawing on our paradigms. But, we live in an age of uncertainty where what we know fails to give us a safe haven and where our existing paradigms are at risk of failure. In this book, Steven Segal opens up a new way of thinking about thinking and about thinking about leadership. Segal brings both a scholarly orientation and a practical focus. In a rather fascinating way Segal brings existential philosophy into the realms of leadership and management thinking. He introduces (reintroduces?) to leadership thinking the ancient wisdom of Aristotle, and brings to life the notions of leadership as existential experience by tapping into a range of philosophers including Heidegger, Wittgenstein, and Buber. This book moves the leadership paradigm from one that is rooted in theory to one that is anchored and shaped by one's leadership experience.

through the use of examples of eminent CEOs, Business Feel for Leading in the Midst of Organisational Change outlines a variety of skills involved in the development of business feel. This new edition builds upon the ideas explored by the author in Business Feels (2004), featuring new material on leadership development and philosophy.

About the Author STEVEN SEGAL is Senior Lecturer at the Macquarie Graduate School of Management, Macquarie University, Australia. He coaches and runs courses enabling managers and leaders to develop their 'business feel'. He is recognised internationally as a pioneer in the field of philosophical practice and has published a number of books and journal articles.
